Hi Charlotte

Nourish Scotland wholeheartedly supports the proposal from Lauriston Farm to become a hub for learning and engagement on climate, food, land use and nature. Food accounts for around a quarter of global emissions and the transition to a climate-friendly and nature-friendly food system is a key part of the race to preserve a liveable planet.

Climate and nature can seem like huge and shapeless challenges, and leave people unsure what they can actually do individually or collectively to make a difference. Lauriston Farm can provide tangible ways to help people connect food, climate and nature and to use that new knowledge not just to change their own habits but as importantly to shape food policies in communities, organisations, cities and country.
